Production and Capacity Management

ESSENTIALS FOR MAXIMIZING YOUR RESOURCES

Managing production starts with understanding how much a shop is capable of, your current capacity. If production is over capacity business performance suffers. Customer satisfaction declines, cycle time grows, both have a negative effect on the business. Staff may be stressed and each day is chaos management. Knowing how much work your shop can do is the starting point. Having methods to maximize production and drive throughput are skills that can be learned. Learn how to manage production and understand your capacity in this two-day interactive class. This class covers production after repair planning through the entire repair process.
